Poetics Many of the records of Aristotle’s views on art and poetry, much like many other documents of his philosophical and literary works, were composed around 330 B.C. Most of these exist and survive to this day because they were duly noted down and preserved by his pupils during...

English literature - The Romantic period | Britannica

The neoclassical ideal was formed in Italy and spread throughout Europe. This ideal was characterized by an interest in literary theory and a desire to read and understand theoretical works such as Horace’s Art of Poetry and Aristotle’s Poetics. The neoclassical ideal demanded versimilitude ...
